The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Official Doodles Quickly Burned

By Drew Pearson

Uncle Sam's security system is now so strict that even doodling by high officials is checked to make sure their subconse i o u s s c r i b b l i n g doesn't reveal any secrets. The doodles usually are burned if they are drawn dura secret conference. Washington's c ha m p i o n doodler, Secre-tary of State Pearson 2 Dulles, draws complex geometric designs as he thinks. It isn't likely these abstract patterns would give away any secrets. But on the chance a psychologist might get a clue to Dulles' secret thinking from the m, aides scrupulously gather up his doodles and stuff them into a brief case after each meeting.

Secretary of Defense Wilson also doodles at his desk. He may jot down a word or figure or curlicue, but his staff doesn't bother to pick up after him. They are convinced his dood. ling would only confuse enemy agents.

Sensitive agencies, such as the Atomic Energy Commis-sion and Central Intelligence Agency, automatically destroy all doodling or scribbling that has anything to do with secret work.

Atomic Energy Chairman Lewis Strauss does not doodle, but he scrawls notes on tiny white pads and stuffs them in his pockets. He even keeps a pad by his bedside in case he should get an idea in the middle of the night. But he always empties his pockets in his office and is careful to destroy notes that contain security information.

Central Intelligence Chief Allen Dulles scribbles notes on sheets of long, lined vellow paper. His security-minded staff takes no chances and simply incinerates all his waste

"The same is true in other secret offices around Washington. Even doodling is often classified as "top secret."
